About me

Have been working with web technologies for many years making reusable libraries, design systems, tinkering with all kinds of different microfrontends in large-scaled webapps. In the day-to-day work I aim to write clean, scalable, well-tested code that is easy to understand and support.

The journey so far was also about mentoring, leading a team and sharing experience, transforming ideas into solutions together with engineers, designers and product owners. What personally interests me is performance profiling, fostering coding and testing standards and fixing peculiar bugs, plus the new tech and where it can potentially be applied to the benefit of a project.
